encounter: the story of her life, in which she can be great, be herself, and be a girl who can do anything. This is the story of a seven-year-old girl's first attempt at playing tennis. When Madison starts her tennis lessons, she sees it as a challenging opportunity to develop her physical and mental agility. But when her training sessions don't go the way she'd hoped, will she give up on her dream of becoming a tennis player? Moving into adulthood and professional life, failure is very often viewed as a negative thing. For this reason, this delightful book gets at the essence of how to teach children to have self-compassion and to cope with

In a tech-dominated world, the most needed degrees are the most surprising: the liberal arts. Did you take the right classes in college? Will your major help you get the right job offers? For more than a decade, the national spotlight has focused on science and engineering as the only reliable choice for finding a successful post-grad career. Our destinies have been reduced to a caricature: learn to write computer code or end up behind a counter, pouring coffee. Quietly, though, a different path to success has been taking shape. In You Can Do Anything, George Anders explains the remarkable power of a liberal arts education - and the ways it can open the door to thousands of cutting-edge jobs every week. The key insight: curiosity, creativity, and empathy aren't unruly traits that must be reined in. You can be yourself, as an English major, and thrive in sales. You can segue from anthropology into the booming new field of user research; from classics into management consulting, and from philosophy into high-stakes investing. At any stage of your career, you can bring a humanist's grace to our rapidly evolving high-tech future. And if you know how to attack the job market, your opportunities will be vast. In this book, you will learn why resume-writing is fading in importance and why "telling your story" is taking its place. You will learn how to create jobs that don't exist yet, and to translate your campus achievements into a new style of expression that will make employers' eyes light up. You will discover why people who start in eccentric first jobs - and then make their own luck - so often race ahead of peers whose post-college hunt focuses invites children to colour, think, write and draw and let out their emotions that sometimes they don't want to bother their parents with. This encourages them to talk to their parents and express their emotions in healthy ways that help them to become healthy and balanced adults. It is all about what a person believes is POSSIBLE for them - It's NOT about where they have come from. It's where they are going! They are the future! It can be difficult for kids today. The modern world evolves at a faster pace every year. We WANT the very best for our kids, yet sometimes we don't realise what pressure society puts on them. They often hold in stress and anxiety, often not wanting to worry their parents, and we wrongly assume they are without stress at early ages. Scientific breakthroughs now show kids experience many 'adult' emotions from an early age. They often don't want to worry their parents so hold it all inside. As they grow and learn, their active minds act like sponges absorbing all information that comes their way. Often it is a source of amusement as they repeat pretty much everything they hear. This is part of their brain's development and helps in learning and retaining information. Often what we don't realise is that some of what is being learned and copied is damaging to their self worth and individual identity. It is SO important for these beautiful bright young souls to be able to express themselves fully. A study by leading British psychologists, has proven that many boys between the ages of 4 to 10 can only express anger, leading to aggressive behaviour, in later life. From early ages this is often expressed in war games, which are often encouraged. They are not, often, encouraged to release their fears and stresses by talking or writing down their feelings in a journal. Allowing them to talk about how they feel on a daily basis, helps release unhappiness and stress, allowing them time to grow, play, learn and be the best they can be, to become healthy and balanced adults. Many girls have been found to put excessive importance on looks over emotions in this age of the selfie. They too need a release for all that stress and anxiety. This book is aimed at children between 5 and 10 years old, to get them to interact, write, play, colour in, think and most importantly of all RELEASE all that is troubling them. It IS
