Becoming Naturally Therapeutic: A Return To The True Essence of Helping. By Jacquelyn Small. You may never have thought of yourself as a therapist, having reserved that title for people who have professional counselor roles. Yet research has made clear that the most therapeutic responses to people in trouble often come from "ordinary people" who don't think of themselves as experts, teachers, judges, counselors, or ministers.

If you are honest and genuine with your patients, eventually they will reciprocate. This can help your patients become more receptive, talk more, and have more productive sessions. Take your time. Relationships with patients develop at a similar pace to relationships that you have with friends and loved ones. Allowing patient/therapist relationships to build with time will help ensure that those relationships are healthy and productive.
