In Malaysia, our contract law is basically governed and enforced by the Contract Act 1950. The remedy of specific performance presupposes the existence of a valid contract between the parties to the controversy. The terms of the contract must be definite and certain.

Malaysian Contract Law

The law of contract in Malaysia is codified under the Contracts Act 1950 wherein it sets out the ways in which one may enter into a contract in Malaysia and how such contract can be legally binding. The Act also sets out the elements that limit the ways in which a contract may be entered and carried out. If the said contract is breached, the said Act sets out how the said contract can be enforced in the court of law and the remedies available to the aggrieved party.

In Malaysia, our contract law is basically governed and enforced by the Contract Act 1950. The remedy of specific performance presupposes the existence of a valid contract between the parties to the controversy. The terms of the contract must be definite and certain. This is significant because equity cannot be expected to enforce either an invalid contract or one that is so vague in its terms that equity cannot determine exactly what it must order each party to perform.
