'Luther: Man Between God and the Devil' (translated from his 'Luther: Mensch zwischen Gott und Teufel') is Oberman's magnum opus; it is over 300 pages of what is a biography of Luther that surpasses even the classic text: Roland Bainton's 'Here I Stand: A Life of Martin Luther'. However, to say this text is a biography is somewhat misleading.

Luther: Man Between God and the Devil by Heiko A. Oberman

Oberman's purpose in writing Luther: Man Between God and the Devil is to "grasp the man in his totality—with head and heart, in and out of tune with the temper of his time" (xix). The thesis of Luther: Man Between God and the Devil may be summarized briefly. Convinced he and his generation were living in the Last Days, Luther saw himself as a prophet proclaiming the "Reformation-to-come"—the second coming of Christ when God would consummate His kingdom.

Heiko Oberman's Luther: Man between God and the Devil is both, and I wish I had picked it up a long time ago. It is not the entry-level biography that many of us are familiar with in James M. Kittleson's Luther the Reformer, nor is it a popular treatment of Luther's life such as Roland Bainton's Here I Stand. It is instead that rare combination of scholarly work and enjoyable biography, one that both adds new information to the reader's understanding of this complex man and refutes ...

In an effort to solve the mystery of who between God and the Devil took Luther's soul, Oberman's book (3) gives an account of how simple believers and people in the academic world sought to establish the truth. The not-so-informed believers simply imagined that whoever was fast would snatch Luther's soul first.

Oberman, Heiko A., Luther, Man between God and the Devil, Translated by Eileen Walliser-Schwarzbart (New Haven, Yale University Press, 1989) Paperback edition published 2006. This is the third biography I have read of Luther, and it may be the best single volume 'intellectual' biography, which deals a bit more with those currents which influenced his thought than some other volumes.
