Tudor Crime and Punishment - Local Learning
There were no police during the Tudor times. However, laws were harsh and wrongdoing was severely punished. In Tudor times the punishments were very, very cruel. People believed if a criminal's punishment was severe and painful enough, the act would not be repeated and others would deter from crime as well.

Tudor Crime and Punishment - Mandy Barrow
People were hanged as a result of crimes ranging from murder and treason to theft and rebellion, and hangings often took place in the town centre where people would gather to watch. 3. Burning. Perhaps one of the most horrible Tudor punishments (although they're all pretty bad) is being burnt to death at the stake.

Hanging was the usual punishment for serious crime, including murder, in Tudor England but it could often be a messy affair. Contemporary writer William Harrison might have assured us that those who were hanged went 'cheerfully to their deaths', yet executions were amateurish compared to those performed by professional hangmen of later centuries.

Tudor Punishments for Crimes. Punishments are nothing but a method wherein a person guilty of doing a wrongful act was made to pay for the same. It was believed that the hardship imposed on the person by the means of punishments would deter the person from taking such steps in the future. In olden times like the Tudor period, the methods of imparting punishments were very brutal and harsh in comparison to the sort of punishments that are generally given today.
