Unholy Terror Bosnia Al Qaida

On 22 July 1991 the Islamist President Izetbegovic of Bosnia held talks in the USA, supposedly 'on how to prevent a Bosnian war'. In fact it was rather on how to start one. On 24 February 1992, Izetbegovic scrapped a peace plan 'with the apparent encouragement of Warren Zimmermann, the U. S. Ambassador to Yugoslavia'.

The intriguing sixth chapter of Unholy Terror: Bosnia, Al-Qa'ida, and the Rise of Global Jihad, "Not so Secret Secrets," dissects the role of the Clinton administration in allowing the Bosnian Muslims to be armed and manned by the Islamic internationale. Coming from a former NSA officer, this chapter is especially interesting and important, exposing as it does the wide divide between the ...

Unholy Terror: Bosnia, Al-Qa'ida, and the Rise of Global ...

The author's contention that Bosnia was a "major training ground" for al-Qaeda may be debatable; by his own sources the foreign jihadists contributed little on the battlefield. The book's importance is its focus on the tribalist nature of the Izetbegovic regime, no different in kind from its opponents. Its real strength was of course its opposition to the hated Serbs, and its canniness in ...
